Schacht had been in frequent telephonic conversation with Paris while consulting with his government in Berlin. It was reported he would present a proposition to Owen D. Young, chairman of the conference, offering to pay reparations for a reduced number of years but with increased annuities approximating the French demands for 1,800,000,000 marks ($428,400,000).

The profits of the International bank proposed by the experts to handle reparations, would be supposed to aid the Germans in paying the later annuities for the first 10 or 15 years, under the new proposition.

CONSOLIDATING MEXICO MORE STRONGLY, STATED

GRADUAL BREAKING UP OF REVOLUTION IS NOW IN PROGRESS

PRESIDENT GIL GIVES HIS IMPRESSIONS OF THE SITUATION

By GESFORD F. FINE
(United Press Staff Correspondent)
Mexico City, May 2.—In spite of the bloodshed and heavy financial cost of the dying Mexican revolution, President Emilio Portes Gil believes the revolt will be beneficial to the country by consolidating it more strongly, he told the United Press today.

Consenting to discuss the possible effects of the revolution as news from the battle front told of the gradual breaking up of the revolt, the president said he believed the failure of Gen. J. Gonzalo Escobar had lessened the possibility of other civil wars in the future.

The whereabouts of Gen. Escobar, rebel commander in chief, were not known today, but a dispatch from the El Paso consulate said it was understood he had left Agua Fria with his staff, heading towards the mountains and apparently hoping to cross into the United States.

Government officials indicated they would accept the flight of Escobar as a sign of the virtual end of the revolt, since they did not believe the rebel soldiers would fight without the urging of a leader of Escobar's ability. Other leaders already have fled across the international boundary.

Repeating his belief that Mexico's reputation as a revolt-torn nation would fade steadily in the future, the president said today: "I believe firmly that the breakup of the Huerta movement in 1923 and the fracas this year means that if rebellions of this type recur in the future it will not be with the same frequency as in the past."

"The official attitude towards the church will continue the same as now," Portes Gil said in reply to a question as to whether any change on the religious question might be expected. "As repeatedly stated, the government is not persecuting any religions. The Catholic clergy can resume services when it desires, the only obligation being that it obey the laws."

Portes Gil said he did not believe the Catholic church as an organization had the slightest connection with Gen. Escobar's revolt.

"It was exclusively military, based entirely on the petty ambitions of corrupt chieftains," he said.

RAPIDLY GROWING CHAIN STORE SYSTEM ATTACKED BY GRIMES

Washington, May 2.—(UP)—The rapidly growing chain store system was attacked and independent retailers were encouraged to compete with the invader at his own game of mass buying and economical distribution in an address by J. Frank Grimes, president of the Independent Grocers' Alliance, before the United States Chamber of Commerce today.

"Being of non-resident ownership," Grimes said, "the chain store's interest in local welfare cannot help but be incidental. All it wants is profit. It aims primarily at the destruction of small businesses."

"But small business is not yet dead. Once it grasps the significance of mass operations, what a glorious future will unfold. But real progress will be made only when the wholesaler and retailer understand that it must match or excel its formidable competitor through greater efficiency, economy and modern sales methods."

EXPLOSION AT HEATING PLANT INJURES 3 MEN

Rochester, Minn., May 2.—(UP)—An explosion at the Franklin heating plant here early today caused serious injury to C. O. Hadley, superintendent, John McLean, chief engineer, and Clifford Mason, assistant engineer. Hadley and McLean were removed to hospitals with badly scalded bodies.

The Franklin plant provides heat for the Mayo clinic and other buildings.

BRAINERD 25 YEARS AGO

From the Daily Dispatch

May 2, 1910

The Edwards Wood & Co. has changed the style name of the firm. It is now "The Edwards-Woods Company" and they have incorporated.

The contract has been let for the cement walk to be laid in front of the opera house running clear down to the corner of Front and Sixth street. Work was started this morning.

Frank Ponth, who has been conducting an upholstering establishment in connection with the C. M. Patek furniture house, has rented rooms in the Gardner block on Laurel street and expects to engage in business on his own account.

The store of J. W. Koop was entered some time during the night, and the safe was tampered with, $10,000 in notes being carried away. The burglars made their entrance through the back door by prying it open with a crow bar. The loss is a severe one to Mr. Koop.

Mrs. Maynard, of Minneapolis, who has been visiting in the city at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. McColl, returned home this afternoon.

A deal has been partially closed by L. E. Lum and W. D. McKay for the purchase of the Albert Angel corner, Laurel and Seventh street, and it is stated on good authority that they will erect a modern and up to date block here. It is known the building will be built for store purposes and it is understood that Slipp Brothers have already spoken for one of the stores.

WM. J. BOGAN, Superintendent Chicago Public Schools, says, "I consider it more important for the child to study music than mathematics." Music lessons in the school and home are not a luxury but a necessity. The old idea that a child must have gifted talent to study piano is now a proven error. Nor is music merely for those seeking to become artists. It is not what the child can do with music but what music will do for the child.

"Wolf Song" Proves Big Hit As Three Star Performers Excel Themselves

Harvey Fergusson's novel, "Wolf Song," a romantic tale of pioneering days in the frontier of the old South, west in the 1840s proved to be thrilling fare for the audience which saw its moving picture version at the Lyceum theatre last night when it opened for a three days' run.

UNEMPLOYMENT PROBLEMS

WE are all in favor of efficiency in the management or conduct of various enterprises. We like to trade at a store where efficiency is exemplified in courteous, willing to serve clerks. We like to eat at the restaurant where efficiency produces a fine menu at reasonable prices and the service is commensurate with the fine food served. We want efficiency in our car's operation and the repairs made. We just dote on efficiency when it contributes to our welfare.

But there is another side to the efficiency story and that comes when so-called efficiency experts take hold of a factory or industry and make it so efficient that a large group of workers is dropped from the payroll and new machinery and new methods permit a smaller group to actually increase output at lower proportionate cost. The workers discharged are in a quandary and many times cannot be absorbed by other industries, for the latter, by the way, may also be feeling the influence of efficiency experts.

President Hoover, as a mining engineer, knew what this phase of the laboring world means when he made his campaign speeches on the problem of unemployment.

We quote a few examples from the April issue of the Survey, which in a foreword states that the number of the magazine "is levelled at an old and benumbing myth in the minds of all of us. It rams home a charge of facts, experience and clear thinking at our habit of associating unemployment with hard times, or with cyclones and drought as acts of God, unpredictable, unpreventable." It gives a new concept of much modern unemployment as a needless and controllable by-product of industrial progress.

Here is an example in switching, the XYZ railroad at N employing 305 men. Two-thirds of the force was unskilled or semi-skilled labor, while about 100 of these employees were highly skilled railroad men who had been with the XYZ for from two to nineteen years. The yard was electrified and 151 men were able to do the work formerly requiring 305. Also, it was found that less skill and experience on the part of the switch-yard force was called for under new conditions. Accordingly, 154 men were laid off on a week's notice, the larger proportion coming from the higher-paid group.

In the steel industry 2 men now do the work done by 14 in charging furnaces; 7 men cast as much pig-iron as 60 could do a decade ago; in open-hearth operation, 1 man does the work of 40; 2 men now replace 128 in unloading pig-iron. Economizing in time and man-power, the gross tonnage of production has been speeded up.

The Rialto theater in a large eastern city had an orchestra of 40 trained musicians. The Rialto installed a talkie and overnight the 40 musicians were jobless.

In railway repair shops, 4 men with oxyacetylene torches can do in from 3 to 7 hours what it formerly took 8 men 3 weeks to perform in repairs to locomotives.

An instance is quoted of a textile mill which in 1927 employed 5,100 workers and produced 137,000 yards of woollens. Next year with new machinery and methods a force of 3,000 produced the same yardage. The 2,100 displaced workers looked for jobs and added to an already acute unemployment situation in the textile trades.

As we see this thing, if the farmer is put on easy street as far as legislation can do it, a whole lot of the unemployed may have to "jump in" and go back to the land. That will at least provide food and take care of material wants.

THE DEBENTURE PLAN

THE debenture plan which some seek to attach to the farm relief bill appears to be a second cousin to the equalization fee and President Hoover will not recognize the debenture, in fact he has expressed his complete disapproval of both.

Supporters of the debenture plan believe it will immediately relieve the distress of the farmers and will raise the price of farm products in the same way as the tariff raises the cost of manufactured articles.

What is wrong with the debenture plan? We quote a New York paper summary of President Hoover's analysis, made by Carter Field, Washington correspondent of the New York Herald Tribune and mentioned in a recent issue of the Literary Digest.

"The debenture plan, Mr. Hoover declared, would be sure to result in increased taxation; it would defeat its own purpose, providing any of the hundreds of millions of dollars it would cost should trickle through to the farmers themselves, by stimulating over-production, thus reducing world prices; it would put some $200,000,000 in the pockets of speculators the year it was placed in operation; it would enable foreign manufacturers of cotton to undersell American textiles and work the same kind of hardship on the American dairy, hog, and cattle industries by providing cheaper feed for their competitors; it would lead to manipulation because of the opportunity on some products on which the ocean freight both ways would be less than the bounties; it would be a violation, if done by any other country, of our own anti-dumping laws, and might therefore run afoul of similar laws in other countries."

And the most serious thing to be digested, in case the debenture plan were adopted, says President Hoover, is that the plan would require a substantial increase in taxes, as no such expenditure or depletion of revenues as this plan implies could be paid from marginal income of the Government.

Instead of making the farmer a sort of master of his own destiny, the exporter and speculator would slip in to sip the cream.

CANADA'S SENSIBLE VIEW

ACCORDING to the Toronto, Ontario, Globe there is little disposition on either side of the boundary to magnify the I'm Alone sinking into an excuse for international tension. The British and Canadian diplomatic representatives have, rightly, moved promptly and firmly in the case. But there is no desire to pass judgment on the merits of the incident until all the evidence is taken. The refusal to get unduly excited on this side of the line is, no doubt, partly the result of the attitude of responsible authorities south of the border.

If it is established that the United States ship broke the law Canada will no doubt insist upon full indemnity for the loss. Meanwhile no Canadian can altogether ignore the fact that the victims of the episode are professional lawbreakers, absolutely indifferent to the international dangers that are the chronic result of their trade.

UNEMPLOYMENT PROBLEMS

WE are all in favor of efficiency in the management or conduct of various enterprises. We like to trade at a store where efficiency is exemplified in courteous, willing to serve clerks. We like to eat at the restaurant where efficiency produces a fine menu at reasonable prices and the service is commensurate with the fine food served. We want efficiency in our car's operation and the repairs made. We just dote on efficiency when it contributes to our welfare.

But there is another side to the efficiency story and that comes when so-called efficiency experts take hold of a factory or industry and make it so efficient that a large group of workers is dropped from the payroll and new machinery and new methods permit a smaller group to actually increase output at lower proportionate cost. The workers discharged are in a quandary and many times cannot be absorbed by other industries, for the latter, by the way, may also be feeling the influence of efficiency experts.

President Hoover, as a mining engineer, knew what this phase of the laboring world means when he made his campaign speeches on the problem of unemployment.

We quote a few examples from the April issue of the Survey, which in a foreword states that the number of the magazine "is leveled at an old and benumbing myth in the minds of all of us. It rams home a charge of facts, experience and clear thinking at our habit of associating unemployment with hard times, or with cyclones and drought as acts of God, unpredictable, unpreventable." It gives a new concept of much modern unemployment as a needless and controllable by-product of industrial progress.

Here is an example in switching, the XYZ railroad at N employing 305 men. Two-thirds of the force was unskilled or semi-skilled labor, while about 100 of these employees were highly skilled railroad men who had been with the XYZ for from two to nineteen years. The yard was electrified and 151 men were able to do the work formerly requiring 305. Also, it was found that less skill and experience on the part of the switch-yard force was called for under new conditions. Accordingly, 154 men were laid off on a week's notice, the larger proportion coming from the higher-paid group.

In the steel industry 2 men now do the work done by 14 in charging furnaces; 7 men cast as much pig-iron as 60 could do a decade ago; in open-hearth operation, 1 man does the work of 40; 2 men now replace 128 in unloading pig-iron. Economizing in time and man-power, the gross tonnage of production has been speeded up.

The Rialto theater in a large eastern city had an orchestra of 40 trained musicians. The Rialto installed a talkie and overnight the 40 musicians were jobless.

In railway repair shops, 4 men with oxyacetylene torches can do in from 3 to 7 hours what it formerly took 8 men 3 weeks to perform in repairs to locomotives.

FIRST LAP OF 1929 MAJOR LEAGUE RACES NEARS END

EASTERN CLUBS OF AMERICAN HEADING WEST

INVASION OF EAST UNDER WAY BY QUARTET OF WESTERN CLUBS

JOE MCCARTHY'S CHICAGO CUBS UNLIMBER BATS AGAINST PHILLIES

By WILLIAM J. DUNN
(United Press Staff Correspondent)
New York, May 2.—The first lap of the 1929 major league baseball races nears its end today.

Tomorrow the eastern clubs of the American league head west for their first invasion of that territory. In the National league the invasion of the east by the western quartette of clubs starts this afternoon at Philadelphia where Joe McCarthy's Chicago Cubs unlimber their bats against the Phillies.

The other National league teams swing into action in this section tomorrow and Friday while all the eastern American league teams make their western debut on the latter date.

Chicago fans will watch with fearful interest the eastern debut of the Cubs.

Last year the Cubs moved into Philadelphia on August 6, in the van and moving fast. The Phillies won four straight and Chicago never recovered from the shock.

Interest in the Cubs is high throughout the west because of their reputed strength with the willow and the fact that they are pre-season favorites to win the flag.

Especially is this true here in New York where the fans figure them as the team the Giants must beat if they are to return to the pennant-winning class. The Cubs make their 1929 metropolitan debut in Flatbush next Tuesday opposing the Dodgers.

The Yankees today are host to the Washington Senators and tomorrow will find them speeding westward for their Friday game with the Chicago White Sox. Washington, at the same time, will be enroute to Cleveland.

The Athletics and Red Sox start to St. Louis and Detroit, respectively, after their game at Boston today.

The Cincinnati Reds and the St. Louis Cardinals open in the east tomorrow, the former at Brooklyn and the latter at the Polo grounds here. Pittsburgh opens at Boston Friday.

The Braves, out in front in the National at the first turn, will get their acid test within the next two weeks. If they remain at the head of the procession after playing Pittsburgh, St. Louis, Cincinnati and Chicago in succession they will have won for themselves the rank of contenders.

Watching the Scoreboard

(By United Press)

Yesterday's Hero—Alvin Crowder, St. Louis Browns' pitcher who held the Cleveland Indians to eight hits and won his fourth game of the season for the Browns, 4 to 3. The Browns remain a game and a half ahead of the Philadelphia Athletics in first place in the American league.

The Athletics set what may be a season record for runs in trimming the Boston Red Sox, 24 to 6, at Boston. Ten runs were scored by the A's in the sixth. Al Simmons made five hits in six times at bat, including a home run.

Rain washed out games at New York, where the Washington Senators were to have opposed the Yankees, and at Chicago where Detroit was to have appeared.

At Cincinnati the Chicago Cubs fought the Reds to a 4 to 4 tie which ended when the Windy City club had to catch a train for Philadelphia. Darkness ended the Pittsburgh-St. Louis game with the count tied in the 13th at four runs each.

Rain halted two games in the National league—New York at Brooklyn and Boston at Philadelphia.

BYES BREAK OILERS PERFECT RECORD BY WINNING, 9 TO 7

SINCLAIR OILS MAKE 13 HITS BUT FAIL TO MAKE USE OF THEM FOR RUNS

BYES RUN NINE HITS INTO NINE RUNS; SERVICE MOTOR, MOOSE TONIGHT

The Sinclair Oil Co. diamondball team entertained the Bye Clothing Co. at a hitting bee last evening and were upset by a score of 9 to 7. Previous to this game the Oilers were undefeated and were heavy favorites to win, but the Byers tipped the dope bucket.

The Oilers made thirteen hits but could only convert that many blows into seven runs while the Byes manufactured nine runs on nine hits. Poor base running and lack of good pitching were big factors in the Oilers' defeat.

Both pitchers were hit hard but Erickson, pitching for the winners, managed to survive through the sensational support given him by his team mates. Werner, the Oilers ace, had nothing on the ball but the cover and his shoots looked mighty sweet to the Bye sluggers. He was knocked out of the box, being nipped for nine runs and eight hits in the first three innings. Frank Wise replaced him and held the clothiers helpless the rest of the game.

The Oilers took the lead in the first inning when they scored a run. Welsh reached first on an error and advanced to third on Hively's single and scored when Thompson hit another single. The Byers scored four runs in the last half of the first. Cunningham doubled, Swanson walked, Nutting cleaned the bags with a two-bagger and Erickson hit a home run. The Oilers knotted the count in the second. Olson got a home run when Senn could not hold his drive. Blanck doubled and Werner followed suit. Welsh sent Werner home with a sacrifice hit. Hautala was then put out trying to stretch his three base hit into a home run. Byes scored another run in the second when Flaata doubled and came home on an overthrow.

In the third inning the Byers tallied four times. Nutting got a life on an error, Erickson and Senn singled in succession and Schuety got a double when three Sinclair players let his fly ball drop between them. He scored on Larson's double and then Cunningham ended the rally when he skied to Blanck. The Oilers counted a run in the fourth when Olson hit another home run. They added two more in the fifth when Hautala walked and scored on Engbretsen's double who in turn counted on Wise's single.

Tonight the Service Motor Co. will meet the Moose. Whitlock will pitch for the "Chiefs" and Fitzsimmons will receive. Crust and Marcomb will be the battery for the Moose.

TWO WILL MEET AGAIN IN OPEN AIR SHOW AT DETROIT JUNE 7

Detroit, Mich., May 2.—(UP)—Ray Miller, Chicago's contribution to the ranks of the left hook artists and Billy Petrolle, sensational Fargo, N. D., lightweight, will meet again over the 10-round route in an open air show here June 7, following their torrid exhibition last night.

Miller was awarded a unpopular decision by referee Elmer "Slim" McClelland after Petrolle had carried six out of 10 rounds in the opinion of ringside critics.

The decision was roundly booed by the 12,000 fans.

A foreign word is one which has not yet been incorporated into another language. An example would be "heimweh," meaning "homesickness."

The statement accused Dempsey of telling an untruth and denied that any agreement ever existed between the former champion and Caplan regarding a Singer-Chocolate match.

FIRST LAP OF 1929 MAJOR LEAGUE RACES NEARS END

EASTERN CLUBS OF AMERICAN HEADING WEST

INVASION OF EAST UNDER WAY BY QUARTET OF WESTERN CLUBS

JOE MCCARTHY'S CHICAGO CUBS UNLIMBER BATS AGAINST PHILLIES

By WILLIAM J. DUNN
(United Press Staff Correspondent)
New York, May 2.—The first lap of the 1929 major league baseball races nears its end today.

Tomorrow the eastern clubs of the American league head west for their first invasion of that territory. In the National league the invasion of the east by the western quartette of clubs starts this afternoon at Philadelphia where Joe McCarthy's Chicago Cubs unlimber their bats against the Phillies.

The other National league teams swing into action in this section tomorrow and Friday while all the eastern American league teams make their western debut on the latter date.

Chicago fans will watch with fearful interest the eastern debut of the Cubs.

Last year the Cubs moved into Philadelphia on August 6, in the van and moving fast. The Phillies won four straight and Chicago never recovered from the shock.

Interest in the Cubs is high throughout the west because of their reputed strength with the willow and the fact that they are pre-season favorites to win the flag.

Especially is this true here in New York where the fans figure them as the team the Giants must beat if they are to return to the pennant-winning class. The Cubs make their 1929 metropolitan debut in Flatbush next Tuesday opposing the Dodgers.

The Yankees today are host to the Washington Senators and tomorrow will find them speeding westward for their Friday game with the Chicago White Sox. Washington, at the same time, will be enroute to Cleveland.

The Athletics and Red Sox start to St. Louis and Detroit, respectively, after their game at Boston today.

The Cincinnati Reds and the St. Louis Cardinals open in the east tomorrow, the former at Brooklyn and the latter at the Polo grounds here. Pittsburgh opens at Boston Friday. The Braves, out in front in the National at the first turn, will get their acid test within the next two weeks. If they remain at the head of the procession after playing Pittsburgh, St. Louis, Cincinnati and Chicago in succession they will have won for themselves the rank of contenders.

Watching the Scoreboard

Yesterday's Hero—Alvin Crowder, St. Louis Browns' pitcher who held the Cleveland Indians to eight hits and won his fourth game of the season for the Browns, 4 to 3. The Browns remain a game and a half ahead of the Philadelphia Athletics in first place in the American league.

The Athletics set what may be a season record for runs in trimming the Boston Red Sox, 24 to 6, at Boston. Ten runs were scored by the A's in the sixth. Al Simmons made five hits in six times at bat, including a home run.

Rain washed out games at New York, where the Washington Senators were to have opposed the Yankees, and at Chicago where Detroit was to have appeared.

At Cincinnati the Chicago Cubs fought the Reds to a 4 to 4 tie which ended when the Windy City club had to catch a train for Philadelphia. Darkness ended the Pittsburgh-St. Louis game with the count tied in the 13th at four runs each.

Rain halted two games in the National league—New York at Brooklyn and Boston at Philadelphia.

Daphne

by HAZEL LIVINGSTON

WHAT HAS HAPPENED SO FAR.

DAPHNE HAINES, seventeen and lovely, finds life intolerable because of a nagging, jealous stepmother whose main aim is to promote a courtship between her own daughter, Crystal, and wealthy, attractive Ralph McKewitt. Catching a fleeting glimpse of Daphne, the "prize" young man admires her. Mrs. Haines, fearing the rivalry of the younger girl, schemes to eliminate her from the scene. Daphne dismayed when she realizes how completely these two calculating women have her father in their power, comforts herself by spinning secret dreams of a day when someone will really love her—a man, big, powerful, handsome, like Ralph! A sordid quarrel is provoked between Haines and his wife because of the woman's reckless expenditures. Subtly Mrs. Haines draws Daphne into the brawl. Feeling the hopelessness of her situation, Daphne determines to make her own way in the world, and leaves for San Francisco. With twenty dollars capital she seeks employment and learns it is hard to find. Daphne has an unpleasant experience with a prospective employer and in her haste to get away from him, leaves a purse containing her last five dollars in his office. The wolf seems perilously close. Hunger seizes her and she walks the streets wondering what she can buy to eat with a nickel. She decides upon a cup of coffee.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

CHAPTER X.

INSIDE the Java Inn the air was warm and smoky. A great hooded range extended along one side. The small, brown tables were crowded. Sailors mostly. Nice-looking boys, lean and bronzed from the salt wind, ready for anything. They raised bold, friendly eyes to look at Daphne as she came in. One of them grinned. "Hello, cutie!"

"Aw, shut up!" his companion drawled. "You're annoyin' the lady!" And he grinned, too, and deliberately winked a bold, dark eye.

Embarrassed, Daphne sank into the nearest empty chair at the other side of the room. Under lowered lashes she saw that she had chosen a table at which a man sat smoking, reading a newspaper.

The waiter placed a paper napkin, a knife and fork and a glass of ice water on the bare table before her, and a long, spotted "Bill of Fare."

"Just a cup of coffee—that's all!" At the sound of her voice the young man opposite looked at her over the top of his paper, then returned to his reading.

The waiter went away and didn't come back. The sailors shuffled out with a great scraping of chairs and flipping of coins on the cashier's counter. Soon Daphne and the man at her table were the only ones left, and she wished, uncomfortably, that she had chosen another table. But the warmth and the smell of food dragged her senses, she sat there stupidly, waiting for her coffee.

It came finally, a tall white mug with the cream already in it, golden brown, boiling hot. With the first sip Daphne began to feel better. Her head cleared. Warmth surged through her. She drank the scalding liquid greedily, and put the cup down in a little panic when she saw that it was already half empty. She wanted to make it last. The man opposite ate coffee, too. He dropped three lumps of sugar into his cup, and stirred it absently, still absorbed in his paper. Then the waiter came back with a smoking platter of ham and eggs, and a plate of bread which he placed between them.

Ham and eggs . . . sputtering still, full of little buttery bubbles . . . Daphne took another sip of coffee. She was hungry, terribly hungry. How good the ham and eggs looked. She watched, fascinated, while the young man cut off a piece of the ham, swallowed it, reached for the salt and pepper. What a lot of pepper! He'd spoil it . . . but he seemed to like it that way. He was certainly enjoying it. She sighed, and reached for a piece of bread. My, but it was nice to eat again, even if it was bread. She had another slice. And another. More than her share, but the man didn't seem to care for bread, some people don't. She watched him furtively, busy with his ham and eggs and French fried potatoes. He looked like somebody she'd seen before. A little wrinkle of concentration gathered between her eyebrows. He was so busy eating that she could frankly stare and he didn't even notice.

Smooth, blond hair, lighter than his tanned skin, well chiseled, very masculine features. Long straight eyebrows. A nice boyish mouth that quirked up at the corners. He looked like . . . like . . . She studied him, trying to remember . . . a collar ad? No, not a collar ad. The man who smoked cigarettes on the billboards, half serious, half humorous . . .

He certainly looked like that cigarette man, but the man in the cigarette ad was darker. "Well—I've seen him somewhere!" she thought. But where? Absorbed in trying to remember, she took the last piece of bread, and ate it dry. The coffee was all gone. Then, absently, with his eyes still on the paper propped beside him, the young man reached for a piece of bread. The plate was empty.

She watched the man furtively, busy with his ham and eggs.

He looked at it blankly, then, with a flicker of amusement he looked across at Daphne, shrinking in her chair, growing smaller and redder every moment. She felt him looking, knew that he was laughing at her. It was no use pretending not to notice. "I'm sorry," she said in a small voice. "I didn't think. I just kept on eating. Maybe it wasn't meant for me at all—"

He continued to look at her, amused and silent, with the air of an old, shaggy dog watching a nervous kitten. When her voice trailed away he said heartily, "Why—that's all right. We'll order some more."

He saw her small, white hand trembling as it closed on the water glass, saw her red purse, so eloquently flat. He studied her a moment longer, and then he added, "And we might as well have a second cup of coffee. The second cup is free!" He grinned, an understanding, big-brother sort of grin, and beckoning to the waiter, he returned to his paper.

Daphne's face was redder than the red leather purse. She didn't know what to do, or what to say. She thought of getting up and leaving, but she couldn't go without her check.

When the waiter came the young man said, "Two more coffees, two more ham and eggs and plenty of bread. Rush it!"

He was still smiling when Daphne met his eyes. Hers were dark and pleading, and he smiled into them reassuringly as he said, "And how are you going to have yours, turned over, or sunny side up?"

"Sunny side up!" She said it quickly, with a shy, half smile, and a little sigh of gratitude. Ham and eggs. She was going to have some ham and eggs. She could taste them already, could see them coming in the platter, all bubbly from the range. "And thanks ever so much—for—for inviting me—"

But he looked at her so blankly

and then grinned so widely that she knew she hadn't said the right thing. Misery swept over her again, and an agony of embarrassment. Perhaps he hadn't intended to pay for hers . . . but of course he had, men who picked up girls always did.

Pickup. That was what she was. She looked miserably at her hands clenched in her lap, and fought a wild desire to put her head down on the table and cry. She was so tired and so hungry, and a strange man was going to pay for her dinner and she couldn't even pay him back with merriment . . . laughter . . . flattery . . . whatever they expected when they bought you dinners.

She stole another look at him and saw with relief that he was reading again. He went right on reading, even after the second order of ham and eggs came, apparently oblivious of her while she ate, timidly at first, then with increasing speed and content. Little warm waves of happiness stole over her, a half-sleepy breathlessness. It tasted so good, so wonderfully, miraculously good. As she drained the last of the coffee she met his eye and smiled, all the misery inexplicably gone. She didn't care if she was a pickup:

she had had something to eat. "Feel better?" he asked good naturedly.

"Oh, yes! Ever so much." He looked so nice, and she was so grateful. Her hand came stealing across the table to his. "I was really sort of sick from not eating—"

"Broke?" She nodded. "I lost some money. All I have is five cents. Isn't that funny?" It was suddenly easy to laugh. "Imagine only having five cents! So I ordered coffee and then I ate your bread—I ought to be ashamed, and I am, only it's so funny—"

"You poor kid!" His hand closed on hers protectively. She found herself walking out of the restaurant with him, down Market to Sacramento Street. A cable car lurched around the curve, passed them with a clang of the motorman's bell. The car was empty, the street was deserted. Daphne stopped, her heart beginning to beat fast. "This isn't my car—I get mine on Market—"

"Well, come on to the garage over here and I'll drive you home. What's the matter—not in a hurry are you?"

"No—but—" His face was close to hers, laughing. "Are you trying to ditch me? Afraid of me?"

"I believe you are. Why, we're old friends now, what's the idea—eat and run?"

"Well—if you want to drive me home," she agreed unhappily. You can't eat and run."

"Look here!" he said again, still teasing. "We've met before. Now let me think—was it—no, not the Palace—"

"You look familiar—but I don't think I've ever met you. I couldn't have, because—because—I haven't met anybody at all!"

"Oh, yes," you have!" He took her arm. Firmly. "Come along; we'll talk this over in the car—"

Daphne by HAZEL LIVINGSTON

WHAT HAS HAPPENED SO FAR.

DAPHNE HAINES, seventeen and lovely, finds life intolerable because of a nagging, jealous stepmother whose main aim is to promote a courtship between her own daughter, Crystal, and wealthy, attractive Ralph McKevitt. Catching a fleeting glimpse of Daphne, the "prize" young man admires her. Mrs. Haines, fearing the rivalry of the younger girl, schemes to eliminate her from the scene. Daphne dismays when she realizes how completely she is being used by her father in their power, combined with the fact that she is a man, big, powerful, handsome, like Ralph. A sordid quarrel is provoked between Haines and his wife because of the woman's reckless expenditures. Subtly Mrs. Haines draws Daphne into the brawl. Feeling the hopelessness of her situation, Daphne determines to make her own way in the world, and leaves for San Francisco. With twenty dollars capital she seeks employment and learns it is hard to find. Daphne has an unpleasant experience with a prospective employer and in her haste to get away from him, leaves a purse containing her last five dollars in his office. The wolf seems perilously close. Hunger seizes her and she walks the streets wondering what she can buy to eat with a nickel. She decides upon a cup of coffee.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

CHAPTER X.

INSIDE the Java Inn the air was warm and smoky. A great hooded range extended along one side. The small, brown tables were crowded. Sailors mostly, nice-looking boys, lean and bronzed from the salt wind, ready for anything. They raised bold, friendly eyes to look at Daphne as she came in. One of them grinned. "Hello, cutie!"

"Aw, shut up!" his companion drawled. "You're annoyin' the lady!" And he grinned, too, and deliberately winked a bold, dark eye.

Embarrassed, Daphne sank into the nearest empty chair at the other side of the room. Under lowered lashes she saw that she had chosen a table at which a man sat smoking, reading a newspaper. The waiter placed a paper napkin, a knife and fork and a glass of ice water on the bare table before her, and a long, spotted "Bill of Fare."

"Just a cup of coffee—that's all!" At the sound of her voice the young man opposite looked at her over the top of his paper, then returned to his reading.

The waiter went away and didn't come back. The sailors shuffled out with a great scraping of chairs and flipping of coins on the cashier's counter. Soon Daphne and the man at her table were the only ones left, and she wished, uncomfortably, that she had chosen another table. But the warmth and the smell of food drugged her senses, she sat there stupidly, waiting for her coffee.

It came finally, a tall white mug with the cream already in it, golden brown, boiling hot. With the first sip Daphne began to feel better. Her head cleared. Warmth surged through her. She drank the scalding liquid greedily, and put the cup down in a little panic when she saw that it was already half empty. She wanted to make it last. The man opposite had coffee, too. He dropped three lumps of sugar into his cup, and stirred it absently, still absorbed in his paper. Then the waiter came back with a smoking platter of ham and eggs, and a plate of bread which he placed between them.

Ham and eggs . . . sputtering still, full of little buttery bubbles. Daphne took another sip of coffee. She was hungry, terribly hungry. How good the ham and eggs looked. She watched, fascinated, while the young man cut off a piece of the ham, swallowed it, reached for the salt and pepper. What a lot of pepper! He'd spoil it . . . but he seemed to like it that way. He was certainly enjoying it. She sighed, and reached for a piece of bread. My, but it was nice to eat again, even if it was bread. She had another slice.

And another. More than her share, but the man didn't seem to care for bread, some people don't. She watched him furtively, busy with his ham and eggs and French fried potatoes. He looked like somebody she'd seen before. A little wrinkle of concentration gathered between her eyebrows. He was so busy eating that she could frankly stare and he didn't even notice.

Smooth, blond hair, lighter than his tanned skin. Well chiseled, very masculine features. Long, straight eyebrows. A nice boyish mouth that quirked up at the corners. He looked like . . . like . . . She studied him, trying to remember . . . a collar ad? No, not a collar ad. The man who smoked cigarettes on the billboards, half serious, half humorous . . .

He certainly looked like that cigarette ad was darker. "Well—I've seen him somewhere!" she thought. But where? Absorbed in trying to remember, she took the last piece of bread, and ate it dry. The coffee was all gone. Then, absently, with his eyes still on the paper propped beside him, the young man reached for a piece of bread. The plate was empty.

She watched the man furtively, busy with his ham and eggs.

He looked at it blankly, then, with a flicker of amusement he looked across at Daphne, shrinking in her chair, growing smaller and redder every moment. She felt him looking, knew that he was laughing at her. It was no use pretending not to notice. "I'm sorry," she said in a small voice. "I didn't think. I just kept on eating. Maybe it wasn't meant for me at all."

He continued to look at her, amused and silent, with the air of an old, shaggy dog watching a nervous kitten. When her voice trailed away he said heartily, "Why—that's all right. We'll order some more."

He saw her small, white hand trembling as it closed on the water glass, saw her red purse, so eloquently flat. He studied her a moment longer, and then he added, "And we might as well have a second cup of coffee. The second cup is free!" He grinned, an understanding, big-brother sort of grin, and beckoning to the waiter, he returned to his paper.

Daphne's face was redder than the red leather purse. She didn't know what to do, or what to say. She thought of getting up and leaving, but she couldn't go without her check.

When the waiter came the young man said, "Two more coffees, two more ham and eggs and plenty of bread. Rush it!" He was still smiling when Daphne met his eyes. Hers were dark and pleading, and he smiled into them reassuringly as he said, "And how are you going to have yours, turned over, or sunny side up?"

"Sunny side up!" She said it quickly, with a shy, half smile, and a little sigh of gratitude. Ham and eggs. She was going to have some ham and eggs. She could taste them already, could see them coming in the platter, all bubbly from the range. "And thanks ever so much—for—for inviting me—"

But he looked at her so blankly

and then grinned so widely that she knew she hadn't said the right thing. Misery swept over her again, and an agony of embarrassment. Perhaps he hadn't intended to pay for hers . . . but of course he had, men who picked up girls always did.

Pickup. That was what she was. She looked miserably at her hands, clenched in her lap, and fought a wild desire to put her head down on the table and cry. She was so tired and so hungry, and a strange man was going to pay for her dinner and she couldn't even pay him back with merriment. . . . laughter . . . whatever they expected when they bought you dinners.

She stole another look at him and saw with relief that he was reading again. He went right on reading, even after the second order of ham and eggs came, apparently oblivious of her while she ate, timidly at first, then with increasing speed and content. Little warm waves of happiness stole over her, a half-sleepy breathlessness. It tasted so good, so wonderfully, miraculously good. As she drained the last of the coffee she met his eye and smiled. All the misery inexplicably gone. She didn't care if she was a pickup:

she had had something to eat. "Feel better?" he asked good naturedly.

"Oh, yes! Ever so much." He looked so nice, and she was so grateful. Her hand came stealing across the table to his. "I was really sort of sick from not eating."

"Broke?" She nodded. "I lost some money. All I have is five cents. Isn't that funny?" It was suddenly easy to laugh. "Imagine only having five cents! So I ordered coffee and then I ate your bread—I ought to be ashamed, and I am, only it's so funny—"

"You poor kid!" His hand closed on hers protectively. She found herself walking out of the restaurant with him, down Market to Sacramento Street. A cable car lurched around the curve, passed them with a clang of the motorman's bell. The car was empty, the street was deserted. Daphne stopped, her heart beginning to beat fast. RURAL CREDIT PLANS FARM IMPROVEMENT

Thousands of Dollars to be Spent in Improved Farms Owned by Department

COUNTIES TO BENEFIT

Field Men of Northern Section to Meet at Bemidji,
May 11

Farms owned by the State Department of Rural Credit will be rehabilitated and given a new resale value through a plan now considered by the department which calls for the expenditure of thousands of dollars in the improvement of them, according to John H. Krekelberg, department field man in charge of five counties, Crow Wing, Aitkin, Morrison, Benton and Cass with headquarters at Brainerd.

Perfection of the plan will be made by field men of the northern section of the state at a meeting to be held at Bemidji, May 11. Mr. Krekelberg will be one of the number represented.

The meeting will virtually take the form of a school of instruction when field men will receive beneficial information to make them farm managers in the handling of acquired real estate.

Outstanding factors in the new rehabilitation plan of the department include:

The painting of farm buildings, fences, and general improvement of the same.

The seeding of land with sweet and other clover.

The eradication of weeds where warranted.

Farms Now Occupied

Although hundreds of farms have been taken over by the department in the state all of them are occupied by good tenants, Mr. Krekelberg said.

The new plan will mean the expenditure of thousands of dollars in the five counties in the district under Mr. Krekelberg's supervision.

New Loans

In the three and one half years from July 1, 1925 to December 31, 1928, a total of 3,648 loans have been closed representing an investment of $14,633,390 a state average of $4,011.32 per loan. In this period only about one third of the total amount of the loans was placed on farms in the sections where the great bulk of the old loans were made. The balance has been made in the old communities of the west central and southern sections of the state where land values are higher and farming conditions more staple. The record shows that in the ten counties which head the list of foreclosures, the average loan for each county prior to July 1, 1925, was from 25 to 78 percent higher than the average of the loans approved for the same county during the latter period. The present law provides that loans shall not exceed 50 percent of the appraised value of the lands plus 30 percent of the appraised value of the buildings. The law enacted in 1925 providing for a double system of appraisals has been very helpful in sifting out undesirable loan risks and in establishing a more accurate valuation basis on which to determine the amount of a safe loan.

The ten counties heading the list of foreclosures are: Marshall, Pennington, Roseau, Kittson, Cass, Becker, Polk, Mahanomen, Beltrami, and Clearwater.

The 807 Rural Credit foreclosures in these counties cover the period from January 1 1925 to December 31, 1928, and represent 68 percent of the total of the department's foreclosures for the state. In that connection it is interesting and call attention to the fact, disclosed by information received from the Register of Deeds, that the total number of farm mortgage foreclosures in these counties during the last four years is 4,266.

From the facts disclosed in the record of individual loans that have been foreclosed, the following is believed to be a correct statement of the principal causes that have brought about this larger number of foreclosures:

Excessive loans.

Successive crop failures on account of droughts or excessive rains. Curtailed credit and financial losses on account of the closing of a large number of banks.

The general depressed conditions of agriculture, necessarily especially acute to the operators of marginal farm loans.

Destruction of crops and farm values because of inadequate outlets to improperly constructed and ill advised drainage projects.

Want of proper diversification and too great dependence on market crops.

Management and Sale

The management and sale of the large number of farms acquired by foreclosure has become the most important and difficult task with which the department has to deal. It has aided greatly in handling this new activity that the department already had at its services an efficient corps of field men widely distributed throughout the state. To correlate and direct their work and maintain the necessary system of accurate records, a land division of the department was established in June 1927, in charge of an experienced land man. Its purposes are threefold:

- Farm sales.
- Farm rentals.
- Farm improvements.

Farm Sales

On December 31, 1928, 112 farms, containing a total of 15,872.49 acres, had been sold for $642,972.38, average price per acre, $40.30. The selling price in excess of the investment on these farms was $13,302.24.

Farm Rentals

Of the total of 767 farms that had been acquired by the department on December 31, 1928, 559 farms were rented for the season of 1928. Rental receipts on these farms up to December 31, 1928, were $58,860.65.

Mortgage Loans

Crow Wing county has received a total of 155 loans representing $393,900.00. Only two farms in this county have been foreclosed, a fine record.

Money Spent on Paint Saves on Home Upkeep

Some of us have our homes painted to make them look attractive. Some of us think that we cannot afford to. A luxury, we say—justifiable, perhaps, if any luxury is because of the recognized effect of surroundings on home life. But still a luxury.

And so, we decide, painting must wait another season. Our budget is limited. We have an improvement to make here, a repair to make there, writes Jane Stewart in the Chicago Evening Post. Thus it goes on from year to year. Little by little the house becomes run down. A change quite imperceptible in the progress, then suddenly we awake to a semi-dilapidated home, all the charm of trimness vanished.

Meanwhile we have spent money on the roof—mending a leak, of course, could not be put off. Gutter spouts, too, needed attention. Little repairs here and there seemed to run up the bills. And we come to the conclusion that an old house is as bad as an old car with its inevitable repair bills (whose size seems to progress in geometric ratio) or, if the house be comparatively new, that cheap construction may be cheap in the beginning, but it is all too costly in the end.

If you have ever reasoned this way, stop and consider. If your house is old—yes, it may be costly to run. But a house is only as old as it looks. And paint can keep it young. As for cheap construction, it is indeed false economy. But in many cases it is the owner and not the builder who is at fault. The construction may be of the best, but there is no roof which in time will not spring leaks if its protective coating is allowed to wear away, no nail that will not rust, no siding that will not weather.

When the wood is left exposed to the weather moisture penetrates and subsequently dries out, with a resulting swelling and shrinking more quickly than those within, because they receive more moisture and dry out more rapidly. As a result, little cracks develop, making moisture penetration even easier. The surface roughens and in time the wood becomes badly weathered. Similarly, metal, if unprotected, corrodes. The roofs and gutter spouts, in need of paint, will rust and leak.

Quite aside from this physical deterioration is the depreciation of property which comes with a run-down condition. Once a house loses its touch of freshness it becomes undesirable property. The difference in price which it will bring is amazing, and the prospective seller may well consider the fact that a few hundred dollars spent for paint, inside and out, may mean the difference of a few thousand dollars in sale price.

American Tastes Rise in Residence Building

The people of the United States are increasing their expenditures for living accommodations considerably more rapidly than the population itself is growing. This is revealed by an investigation of the most recent data covering investment in new homes and apartments throughout the country, just completed by the research department of Greenbaum Sons' Investment company.

New residential construction begun in 1928 called for an outlay approximately 39 per cent greater than the amount expended for the same purpose in 1924. During the same period the population of the country gained only about 5 1/2 per cent.

This would indicate a distinct rise in American tastes and standards in the matter of housing, resulting in an increased demand for more up-to-date and comfortable, and incidentally more expensive, living quarters. It would also indicate that the American pocketbook is sufficiently well supplied to permit the indulgence of these tastes.

Itemizes Cost of Each Trade on Any Building

Following completion of a three-story brick apartment building a Chicago contractor compiled a table showing the proportions of individual costs to the total construction.

The total cost of 35 cents a cubic foot is divided, according to percentage, as follows:

Excavating 2, masonry 30, carpentry and mill work 33 1/3, roofing 1, plastering 7, plumbing 9, heating 6, electric work 1, tile work 1, sheet metal 0.5, painting and decorating 4, glazing 1, miscellaneous iron 0.5, finished hardware 1, cleaning and pointing up 0.1, electric fixtures 1, shades 0.33, screens 0.5.

Approximately the same ratio applies to other buildings used for dwelling purposes, we are told.

People Hunger for Beauty.

The common people of America, although they put up with ugliness, are hungry for beauty. The real estate man has a chance to administer to a beauty-starved people by making their environment beautiful. Beauty is effective insurance against social unrest because men do not revolt against a civilization that makes their lives beautiful.

If you have ever reasoned this way, stop and consider. If your house is old—yes, it may be costly to run. But a house is only as old as it looks. And paint can keep it young. American Tastes Rise in Residence Building

The people of the United States are increasing their expenditures for living accommodations considerably more rapidly than the population itself is growing. This is revealed by an investigation of the most recent data covering investment in new homes and apartments throughout the country, just completed by the research department of Greenbaum Sons' Investment company.

New residential construction begun in 1928 called for an outlay approximately 39 per cent greater than the amount expended for the same purpose in 1924. During the same period the population of the country gained only about 5 1/2 per cent.

This would indicate a distinct rise in American tastes and standards in the matter of housing, resulting in an increased demand for more up-to-date and comfortable, and incidentally more expensive, living quarters. It would also indicate that the American pocketbook is sufficiently well supplied to permit the indulgence of these tastes.

Itemizes Cost of Each Trade on Any Building

Following completion of a three-story brick apartment building a Chicago contractor compiled a table showing the proportions of individual costs to the total construction.

The total cost of 35 cents a cubic foot is divided, according to percentage, as follows:
Excavating 2, masonry 30, carpentry and mill work 33 1/3, roofing 1, plastering 7, plumbing 9, heating 6, electric work 1, tile work 1, sheet metal 0.5, painting and decorating 4, glazing 1, miscellaneous iron 0.5, finished hardware 1, cleaning and polishing up 0.1, electric fixtures 1, shades 0.33, screens 0.5.

Approximately the same ratio applies to other buildings used for dwelling purposes, we are told.

RELIEF FROM CURSE OF CONSTIPATION

A Battle Creek physician says, "Constipation is responsible for more misery than any other cause." But immediate relief has been found. A tablet called Rexall Ordinaries has been discovered. This tablet attracts water from the system into the lazy, dry, evacuating bowel called the colon. The water loosens the dry food waste and causes a gentle, thorough, natural movement without forming a habit or ever increasing the dose.

Stop suffering from constipation. Chew a Rexall Ordinal at night. Next day bright. Get 24 for 25c today at the nearest Rexall Drug Store, Johnson's Pharmacy and Economy Drug Company.
